

Carolina Wren

Stripe above the black eye is white. The stripe is outlined in black.

Throat and area near bill are buff colored.

Entire head, back, wings, and tail are bright brownish-red

black

Black

Light brown

Light brown

Tail is bright brownish-red, with darker brown bars

The Carolina Wren is a common visitor to eastern backyards. Look for it in shrubs and dense undercover. It may be more recognizable by its beautiful, ringing call. Northern populations of Carolina Wrens are susceptible to cold spells and are often severely reduced after cold winters.